Bill Campbell Announces Retirement from Intuit Board of Directors

Company Celebrates Legendary Silicon Valley Coach's Decades of Service

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif.--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- Intuit Inc. (Nasdaq: INTU) announced that Bill Campbell, long-time executive, Intuit board member and chairman, will step down from his role and retire from the board at the end of his current term, in Jan. 2016.

"Inspiring Intuit for more than two decades, Bill has been instrumental in moving our company to new heights," said Brad Smith, Intuit's president and chief executive officer. "It has been an honor and privilege to have benefited from Bill's broad experience, wise judgement and unwavering support through the years."

"In his 30-year career in the tech industry, Bill has helped launch and cultivate dozens of products, startups and successful ventures," said Scott Cook, chairman of Intuit's executive committee. "Bill is recognized throughout Silicon Valley, and namely at Intuit, for playing an inspirational role in building relationships that foster innovation in our industry."

Salute to the Coach

"Not only has Bill been my coach, he's my friend and a true inspiration. While he prefers to work behind the scenes and detests taking credit, we can't let today go by without honoring and celebrating his contributions to Intuit." said Smith.

Intuit honored Campbell today for his numerous contributions and for his leadership.

Campbell has been an Intuit director since 1994 and assumed his role as chairman of the board in August 1998. He previously served as Intuit's president and chief executive officer from April 1994 to July 1998 and as acting chief executive officer from September 1999 until January 2000.

During Campbell's tenure, Intuit solidified its position as the clear leader in tax, personal finance and small business accounting software.
