SAN DIEGO--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- Today, Turbo, from Intuit Inc. (Nasdaq: INTU), the maker of TurboTax and Mint, launched a new financial empowerment campaign, Turbo #RealMoneyTalk. Nearly 4 in 5 (79%) Americans have individual debt (e.g., credit cards, car loans, student loans) not including a mortgage, yet nearly two-thirds (63%) of those who do are tackling these debts alone, according to a new survey commissioned by Turbo and conducted online by The Harris Poll. With consumer debt at an all-time high*, (51%) of Americans are suffering in silence, choosing to not talk about money with their friends or family, according to the survey.

The Turbo #RealMoneyTalk campaign encourages people to break down the taboo of talking about money, because until you acknowledge where you stand, it’s difficult to set goals or move forward.

More than half of Americans (52%) wish they had learned more about topics related to dealing with debt when growing up, according to the survey.

“Money shouldn’t be a source of shame,” said Varun Krishna, Vice President of Product, Intuit Consumer Group. “Talking about it is the first step to financial freedom. Let’s face it, money can be isolating and scary, but you’re not alone. We’re encouraging everyone to have real money talk and share their stories because when we support each other as a community, we grow together.”

To bring the #RealMoneyTalk campaign to life, Turbo partnered with actress Chrissy Metz as a spokesperson due to her refreshing honesty about her past money struggles. The positive response she received after sharing her story made Metz realize that a lot of people experience financial struggles, but don’t talk about them, because they feel alone and ashamed.

“I’m partnering with Turbo because the overwhelming response to sharing my #RealMoneyTalk story made me realize that we’re not talking about money -- and I truly believe that the more we talk about it, the less alone we're all going to feel," shared Metz.
